3. Module description

Description	The course consists of 60 contact hours (practical grammar and conversation) during which students build vocabulary on the basis of textbook texts and articles; they work in pairs, groups or present their opinions in front of the group. Texts and lexical material give students an insight into German-speaking countries. Students practice listening and reading comprehension and acquire new grammatical and lexical skills, concentrating on the relationship between grammatical and lexical structures. They learn new collocations, synonyms, antonyms and word families. Grammatically correct communication and metalanguage awareness are the focal point. Students are able to apply German pronunciation rules. The course aims to give students full perceptual competence and eliminate L1 interference. Some classes take place in the phonetic laboratory with individual booths equipped with
